Victoria.
I visited Aunt Longhine and stayed at this hotel I searched my room - on the 13th floor, but it turned out to not be unlucky - haha!
I'm heading out on my tour of Europe after a quick visit to New York. I'll write you soon.
Love, Anah

My dearest Victoria, My travels have brought me here to Altamira. It's the most wonderful cave paintings. I wish you were here to share this splendid ancient artwork. Always your sister Anah

Look what Victoria found in the attic!
Evidence of the last place Mother's jewelry box was known to be. First thing in the morning, I must send a telegram to Graeme so we can arrange to meet. Maybe Mother's jewelry box is buried somewhere there. But that beach is full of rock outcroppings and seems to go on for miles. Where would one start looking? Ah! I continue to wonder if this was just the beginning of the box's journey after it was snatched from Mother's room all those years ago. But in the least, these photos prove the box was here on this beach, so it is a good place to start. Now it is the time to start re-

DIG SNOW STORM SWEEPS THROUGH IRISH PROVINCES

From Dublin Comes News of a Snow storm on April 10 that Caused Much Damage and Heavy Deaths Reported Livestock Perish in Hugs Drifts.
The week-end snowstorm, which continued up to Tuesday for some places has been responsible for some casualties and the loss of live stock. A man named O'Connell, 40, driving with his 12-year-old nephew to Broomfield (Co Wick) on Sunday evening in a big snowdrift were caught in a big snowdrift also dead. The boy was wearing a blue coat, which the poor man wrapped around him in the end. The man was an old man named O'Connell, of Killybeg, near Killybeg.
